MY BONNY LADY .-- BY GERALD MASSEY Eve gave us her fair daughters to restore The Eden that their mother lost of yore, And where they smile it blooms forevermore They lead us through the angel guarded door; And dearest of Eve's daughters dear is she Why makes an Fden in my home for me;

My bonny lady. No seeming beauty, perilous to know, Like dream of ripeness on her sour sloe, But sweet to the true heart as summer fruit, And sound and strong to love's most secret root A soul made human by its kindling life, A woman ripened to the perfect wife!

My bonny lady. She grows in graces as the flowers bloom, Her robe of beauty wove in heaven's loom; She wears her jewels in her lips and eyes, Diamond sparks, warm rubies, pearls of price! And see what shapely sweetness may be shown, Bright budding from a simple morning gown! My bonny Lady.

That binds the heavy burden souls must bear; The dew of childhood's heaven yet lingering lies, Cool in the shadows of her morning eyes; So may some spirit in its brightness wait With welcome at the beautiful heaven-gate; My bonny Lady. Eyelids, once lifted with the kiss of love,

Upon her dear brow is no band of care

Yet is she happy as the lark that sings, Winnowing out the music with its wings My bonny lady. Lo, how she bows with soft and settled bliss Over her babe in breatbless tenderness.

Her image that my Lily bends above.

To mingle One in my hearts sea of love! Thus hath she doubled love, and love's caress, With doubled blessing, doubled power to bless, My bonny lady. Her smile the sum of sweetness infinite, Her neck a throne where many graces sit. Like music of the soul her motion is, But none can know the inner sanctities; Outside they stand in wonder, I alone

Pass in to worship at the spirit throne, TMy bonny lady.

Behold her in religious lustre stand, Clothed all in white and fit for spirit land, Her thankful eyes uplift for angel food; And you might worship her so pure so good, ay thanks for the patronage so liberally extended | For all shy beauty, all sweet shadowy grace, Breaks into brightness through my lady's face, My bonny lady.
